Background

The conference aims to look at relations between the European Union and Africa under the perspective of inequalities, both between and within these two regions and to explore answers to following questions: What are the different dimensions of inequalities? What are the current trends in and drivers for income and wealth inequalities within the African-European context (economic analysis)? Is transnational solidarity an effective approach to reduce inequalities (political response)? With regard to the ongoing negotiations about the Post-Cotonou Agreement, what could be an adequate institutional response to the existing and growing inequalities?

The colonial legacy in terms of wealth distribution has not been eliminated by the current global economic order and perhaps even exacerbated. The economic discrepancies, and therefore also political unevenness, between the two neighbouring continents Europe and Africa remain significant. In addition, unequal distribution in income and wealth within both regions also remains high or is rising. The European welfare systems, important to compensate inequality, seem to be insufficient or even decreasing. Neither the concept of „Social Europe“ nor the „Rising Africa“ movement has managed to properly respond to this trend. Women are most affected as they constitute the majority of people living in precarious circumstances.

„To overcome inequality“ is a key issue within the Agenda 2030 (SDG No 10).

There is the experience of previous solidarity campaigns in a European-African context undertaken by churches, trade unions, human rights organisations and others, like the Anti-Apartheid movements or Jubilee2000. The panel will discuss how transnational solidarity could be organised today under conditions of a globalised economy and unipolar world. What are the reasons for the absence, or weakness, of progressive organisations and alliances? How could civil society and African diasporas help to shape EU-Africa relations in a more equitable manner?

The present regulatory Cotonou framework of trade, development and political relations between the European Union and African, Caribbean and Pacific countries will expire in 2020. Whereas the current debate is dominated by issues like regionalisation (one foundation, three compacts, continent-to-continent agreement), the budgetisation of the European Development Fund, the conference will offer another perspective by bringing in issues of equality and social justice. How should a new compact address these issues? How to involve key actors like civil society and academia in the debate and the implementation?

„Inequality – A Challenge for African-European Cooperation“ continues the longstanding Austrian tradition of North-South dialogue and builds on the Europe-Southern Africa Conference convened by the same organisers under the first Austrian EU Presidency in 1998.
